How we make an impression

We make impressions on people when we interact with others. An impression is what people are thinking about you. They can have a good impression or a not so good impression of you based on the words you use, the way your face and body looks and the actions you choose to use when talking to someone. Most of the time we want people to have a good impression or a good thought about of us.

When you talk to people, try to figure out what they are thinking about you. Make sure your words, body language and actions make a good impression when you are interacting with other people. If they have a good thought about you, then they will want to hang out with you more!
